

Panel 1

Entering the Woods

CAPTION: The twilight lingers, the temperature plummets, and the road ahead vanishes into a labyrinth of winter.

NARRATION: Some travelers seek the warmth of the hearth. Others seek answers at the end of the road. But poet Robert Frost? He just wanted to see who owned the trees.

ROBERT FROST: (Quietly, to himself) Easy, old boy... let's see what the evening has whispered to the pines.

Panel 2

Whose Woods These Are

CAPTION: A sudden jingle of harness bells shatters the quiet. The trusty steed digs in its hooves, throwing a cautious side-eye into the deepening gloom.

NARRATION: Even the horse knows better than to wander into these shadows without a map. Whose woods these are... that is the eternal question.

ROBERT FROST: (Patting the horse's neck) I know, I know. There's no farmhouse in sight. But a man can't just ride past a mystery, can he?

Panel 3

Dark and Deep

CAPTION: Mile upon mile of untouched white, blanketed in a stillness so profound it feels like the world is holding its breath.

NARRATION: The woods are lovely, dark, and deep. They stretch out like an endless canvas of ink and frost, daring anyone to disturb their slumber.

(No dialogue?just the soft, rhythmic crunch of falling snow and the howling wind through the pines.)

Panel 4

Promises to Keep

CAPTION: Frost pulls the woolen collar tighter against his neck, his eyes drifting past the frozen canopy to the starless, heavy sky.

NARRATION: It's tempting to stay here. To let the snow bury every care, every deadline, every weight of the waking world. But poetry doesn't write itself... and the fire is miles away.

ROBERT FROST: (Sighing softly) The woods are calling, my friend. But we aren't quite ready to sleep. Not yet.

Panel 5

Miles to Go

CAPTION: With a gentle tug of the reins, horse and rider turn their backs on the enchanting gloom, leaving a solitary trail of hoofprints behind.

NARRATION: The night is young, the road is long, and the rest of the world is waiting. Until then... we ride.

ROBERT FROST: (Smiling into the wind) Come on. Let's make some tracks. We've got miles to go before we sleep.